21. c. 29 September 1311 to c. 29 September 1312

The account for 1311/12 encapsulates three of the main themes in the development of Esher since the late 1260s. First, a great amount can be inferred about the lifestyle of the bishop of Winchester: his visit to Rome and his contact with Lord Hugh Despenser; his (and his household's) level of consumption, indicated by the keeping of 26 oxen at Northwode for 'provision of the lord', and the despatching of Esher wine to Farnham Castle and London; and the degree of residential comfort at Esher, summed up by the fashioning of a beech headboard for the bishop's bed. Secondly, a number of references reveal the extent to which the landscape of the manor of Esher had changed since the late 1260s: the built environment now included the chapel and the 'great stable'; young oaks were being nurtured, presumably with further building work in mind; there are references to the pond and the vineyard; and arable farming was less prominent, with 88 acres sown this year. Indeed, the account provides us with a sense of the varied nature and mixed use of the agricultural landscape here. Thirdly, the account provides information about the varying fortunes of workers and peasants at different stages of their lifecycle. For example, Alex the viner enjoyed a particularly lucrative job overseeing the lord's vineyard (and the account provides excellent details about certain aspects of it, from operating the winch press, 'making wine by night', and accounting for evaporation from the casks); he also kept 13 sheep and 7 pigs on pasture next to the vineyard. On the other hand, the account suggests that clouds were beginning to gather for some local peasants: indeed, both the landholdings that were inherited this year were extremely small, of just 3 acres and 5 acres respectively. Faint whispers of local problems are confirmed by the following two accounts, which detail a bad yield of oats, the receipt of a cluster of heriots, and the first mention of an almoner's chamber; unusually, even a sick ox was sold for meat.³⁶⁹ It is perhaps a reflection of challenging local conditions that the daughters of another two local tenants chose to marry outside the manor this year.

This account, and the three that follow in this volume, date from the so-called 'agrarian crisis' of 1315–22. While the Esher account for 1314/15 gives little cause

³⁷⁸ The heading at the top of the Pipe Roll itself merely says 'for three terms of the year', but the heading of the first account, for Taunton, specifies the start date as Michaelmas and the end date as 'the feast of the Apostles Peter and Paul in the 12th year'; that is, 29 June 1316.
